out for themselves, I would like to know how I can inform Grandpa, without causing a war in the family. My grandfather and I would appreciate any advice you have.

UPSET

DEAR UPSET:

If your father and his brothers want to sell your grandfather's house while he's still alive, even if he is in a nursing home, they have to have him legally declared incompetent to handle his own affairs. Should they try to do so, your grandfather will be onto their game immediately, anyway. However, before it gets to that point, I believe you should inform your grandfather what's going on. Even though it will cause some problems, your grandfather has every right to know what's going on so that he can continue to make his own decisions about his life. While you may come under some fire from your father, look him in the eye and ask him if he'd like you to someday treat him the same way he's treating his father right now. I'm sure the answer will be no.
